NOTE.—Describe the claim as accurately as possible (by courses and distances) with reference to some natural object or permanent monument, and mark the boundaries by suitable monuments; if a placer-claim is located on surveyed land, describe the legal subdivision.
 Record of location notices, in absence of a District Recorder, should be made with the proper Recorder of Deeds for the county wherein the claim is situated. It is advisable to have these notices attested by at least two witnesses, for locators cannot be too careful about their evidence. In re-locations to increase width of surface ground under the local law, or to more particularly identify or describe the claim, use the above form, but state after the description that it is a re-location, and in addition where the original location is recorded, in order that the title may revert back to the original discovery. In locations of abandoned mines, the fact that it is such a location should be stated, and the affidavits of two or more respectable parties that such mine was abandoned and subject to re-location should be recorded with the location notice.
 No quartz claim can be legally located until a vein or lode has been first discovered. This should be done by sinking a prospect or discovery shaft. The exterior boundaries of the claim must be distinctly marked by permanent stakes, or monuments placed at the corners of the claim. The notice should be posted at the discovery shaft, and a copy of the same recorded within twenty days after location. In all cases where practicable, the location should be made under a survey by a qualified deputy surveyor.
