with solar attachment. The distances were measured with a 50 foot chain, and a 500 foot wire.
The courses were deflected from the ~~true meridian at determined by direct~~ observations on the sun.

Note The scale of 2000 ft to one inch, being too large to get the group over the regular size, makes it easier to scale of 1000 feet to one

Note On account of the limited space I had to omit several courses

The second class of structures, or metacrusts, includes the great majority of the older metamorphic rocks of the Cordilleran belt. They are characterized by the presence of large, irregular, and often very thick layers of foliated metamorphic rocks, which are usually associated with veins of quartz, feldspar, and other minerals, and with numerous small, irregular, and often very thin layers of sedimentary rocks, such as sandstone, shale, and dolomite. These structures are believed to have been formed by the action of the great mountain-building forces upon the older metamorphic rocks, and they are therefore called metacrusts.
